Joan Cunningham (Ph.D. Public Health: Epidemiology) is a cancer epidemiologist, recently retired from the Medical University of South Carolina. She holds an MSc (Biology: aquatic eco-embryology) from the University of Guelph, Ontario, Canada and Ph.D. (Public Health: epidemiology) from the University of Texas School of Public Health (Houston). Her work focuses on racial disparities in breast cancer, and non-pharmacological mitigation of cancer treatment side effects. She also gives invited lectures on cancer epidemiology to the graduate program at the University of Texas Health Science Center at San Antonio, Texas.

Amanda Haste (Ph.D. Musicology; Dip.Trans.IoLET) is a British musicologist and academic translator whose research interests include identity construction through music and language. She is a member of the Chartered Institute of Linguists and teaches courses in Translation and in English for Specific Purposes at Aix-Marseille University, France. Her research has been published in leading journals and books by major editors, and she co-authored Constructing Identity in an Age of Globalization (Paris: Ex Modio, 2015); and her awards include the Louise Dyer Award for research into British music, and the Elizabeth Eisenstein Essay Prize (2018).

Jordan Lavender (Ph.D. Spanish Linguistics) teaches Spanish and Latin American History at Pomfret School in Pomfret, CT and has conducted research on the use of minority languages on Twitter in Spain, bilingualism in the linguistic landscapes of Azogues, Ecuador, and forms of address in Ecuadorian Spanish, based on ethnographic research in both online and offline contexts.

Annie Rehill (Ph.D. Modern French Studies, MFA) specializes in the literature and history of Francophone Canada, focusing on intercultural expressions and implications. Most recently she has studied Métis literature and art. Previous work in ecocriticism centered on representations of the Canadian coureur de bois figure, and on Francophone Caribbean writings. Her publications include “Le Travail dans la nature canadienne: L’Équilibre (et le déséquilibre) humain tel qu’il est représenté par Louis Goulet et Joseph-Charles Taché” (2018); “An Ecocritical Reading of Joseph-Charles Taché’s Forestiers et voyageurs” (2018); Backwoodsmen As Ecocritical Motif in French Canadian Literature (2016); and “Inscriptions of Nature from Guadeloupe, Haiti, and Martinique” (2015).

Shelby Shapiro (Ph.D. American Studies), the General Editor of The Independent Scholar, served for many years as the English-language editor of Tsum punkt/To the Point, the magazine of Yiddish of Greater Washington, as well as for its predecessor publication. He is currently Associate Editor of Records of the State of Connecticut. His Ph.D. dissertation dealt with acculturation and American Jewish women in the Yiddish press; he is a Yiddish-English translator, and his research interests include Jazz and Blues (having presented jazz radio programs for nine years), the labor movement, the First World War, and immigrant anarchism.

Tim Woolley (Ph.D. Theology) is a British Methodist minister and adjunct lecturer at Cliff College, tutor for the Methodist E-Academy and the Oxford University Department of Continuing Education, and research associate of Wesley House, Cambridge. He researches 19C British Methodism, the Holiness Movement, Revivalism and Nonconformity and has co-written Mission Shaped Intro (2nd ed.) for Fresh Expressions of Church and Talking of God and Worship: Leading and Preaching for The Methodist Church in Britain.
NOTES FOR CONTRIBUTORS
All members of NCIS and their affiliated Partner Group organizations are cordially invited to submit manuscripts to The Independent Scholar (TIS). We welcome submissions in the form of traditional essays as well as creative or artistic material on any topic that will appeal to our members. Your manuscript may be presented in the TIS house style and should be referenced according to APA style. It should conform to the academic standards demanded by NCIS and will be subjected to a robust peer review process. Please consult the submission guidelines before submitting NCIS and will be subjected to a robust peer review process. Please consult the submission guidelines before submitting material, but if you have any queries don't hesitate to contact the relevant member of the TIS Editorial Board. Manuscripts and queries should be sent to the General Editor at tis@ncis.org.

If you have a book you would like reviewed, or you would like to offer to review a book, please email the Book Review Editor on reviews@ncis.org. As a guide to length and content, you can download previous reviews from https://www.ncis.org/book-reviewsthe-independent-scholar-tis.

About NCIS
The National Coalition of Independent Scholars is a 501(c)3 nonprofit corporation (est. 1989) which supports independent scholars worldwide and provides them with a valuable scholarly community. NCIS represents independent scholars from every continent and in many disciplines in STEM and the Humanities. Its members include unaffiliated scholars, adjunct and part-time faculty, emeritus professors, graduate students, researchers, artists and curators. The benefits of membership are many, but the great benefit of joining NCIS is affiliation with an internationally recognized intellectual society.

Today, NCIS is an international organization whose members hail from many countries and pursue diverse fields of study in a variety of disciplines. This is the population NCIS proudly serves.

Member Benefits
NCIS MEMBERSHIP offers opportunities for travel and research grants, member discounts and academic support.

FREE MEMBER RESOURCES include your own member profile page, an NCIS.org email address, and NCIS letters of introduction.

ACADEMIC OPPORTUNITIES & RESOURCES include publication in and/or peer reviewing for The Independent Scholar, book reviewing (or having your own academic book reviewed), free webinars and access to resources on academic skills such as presenting conference papers, chairing conference sessions, and publishing your work.

GRANT AWARDS for which members may apply include NCIS Conference Support Grants and NCIS Research Grants (six awards per year) and the annual Elizabeth Eisenstein Essay Prize. External grant awards can also be administered by NCIS thanks to our 501(c)3 status. More information on all these can be found at www.ncis.org/grants.

MEMBER DISCOUNTS are offered for JSTOR Journal Access and Nota Bene referencing software, and also on Professional Writing and Translation Services from NCIS members.

NETWORKING OPPORTUNITIES include discussion groups on Facebook, Twitter, LinkedIn, collegial support services, regional and online member gatherings, and international NCIS Conferences at major academic institutions.

Both the volumes under review concern the struggles of Black people in the United States before and after slavery ended during the Civil War. In The Textual Effects of David Walker's Appeal: Print-Based Activism against Slavery, Racism, and Discrimination, 1829-1851 Marcy J. Dinius uses one of the most stirring and important clarion calls for revolt, David Walker's Appeal to the Coloured Citizens of the World (1829) and a number of pamphlets published in its wake.

P. Gabrielle Foreman, Jim Casey and Sarah Lynn Patterson are the editors of a collection of papers, The Colored Conventions Movement: Black Organizing in the Nineteenth Century, centered around a movement which began before the first Abolitionist organizations were founded, and which continued into the 1890s. The Colored Conventions also happen to be one of the most ignored aspects of American history in general and Black history in particular.
In The Textual Effects of David Walker's Appeal: Print-Based Activism against Slavery, Racism, and Discrimination, 1829-1851, Marcy J. Dinius first examines successive editions of the Appeal, and then turns to five other pamphlets which sought to extend, elaborate or amend it:

- Maria Stewart's Religion and the Pure Principles of Morality: The Sure Foundation on Which We Must Build (1831) targeted free Black women.
- William Apes (or Apess), in "An Indian’s Looking-Glass for the White Man" (1833) presented Walker’s arguments as seen and extended through Pequot eyes.
- William Paul Quinn’s The Origins, Horrors, and Results of Slavery (1834) circulated the Appeal throughout what then constituted the American West.
- Henry Highland Garnet, in his "An Address to the Slaves" (1848) reprinted the Appeal and expanded it.
- Paola Brown’s Address on the Subject of Slavery (1851) put the Appeal into a Canadian context following passage of the Fugitive Slave Law.

Arguably Chapter 1 – centered on the Appeal itself – is the most interesting and accessible. She points out the lack of copyright and, as well as examining Walker’s use of punctuation and typography, emphasizes the importance Walker placed on grammar. She notes the format of the Appeal, a Preamble followed by four Articles, echoing the Declaration of Independence. Walker’s punctuation and typography served as a road map, analogous to rhetorical marks, on how to read the Appeal, especially to an illiterate audience. Finally, the Appeal served as weapon against Thomas Jefferson’s racist Notes from Virginia.

One of the most interesting and problematic aspects of Dinius’s chapter on William Apes concerns Apes’ approach to Jefferson’s Notes. Walker excoriated Thomas Jefferson’s “enlightened” views on racial hierarchy, particularly Jefferson’s “speculation” that Black people were innately inferior to Whites and were more closely related to “Orang-Outangs” (Appeal, 12). Dinius notes that Apes “by accepting Jefferson’s racial theories as established fact, rather than debunking them as the product of subjective bias” (TE, 131). In looking at Apes’s use of Jefferson’s Notes, Dinius writes “Following Walker, Apes holds White Christian Americans to their best sacred and secular principles. In doing so, he only continues the important reform mission of Walker’s Appeal after Walker’s death but also extends it to apply to Indigenous people. At the same time, repurposing Walker’s powerful appeal to advocate for Indigenous Americans effectively allowed Apes to do what Walker might and should have done himself more powerfully and fully.” (emphasis added, TE, 114).

Dinius compares the approaches of Walker and Apes: “That Apes argued against discrimination against Indigenous people by drawing on, rather than contradicting, Jefferson’s hierarchy of the races in the United States further suggests that Apes saw equal opportunity in the influential arguments of both Walker’s Appeal and Jefferson’s Notes for invoking aspects of each that would help him make his best case to White Christian Americans.” (TE, 114). This reviewer can only repeat the old Yiddish line that “yes, and if my grandmother had a beard, she’d be my grandfather.”

Reading Dinius led this reviewer to The Colored Conventions Movement: Black Organizing in the Nineteenth Century (TE, 272n7), edited by P. Gabrielle Foreman, Jim Casey and Sarah Lynn Patterson. A mostly ignored historical phenomenon, the Conventions occurred from the 1830 until the 1890s and involved thousands of people from coast to coast; it embraced many voices and different solutions to the myriad problems facing Black people in America. Among the sixteen papers in this collection, the authors discuss the role of women in general, and specific women in particular; the routes to Conventions followed by various delegates; the Black press, and the world of print; boarding houses and sociability; debates over citizenship and colonization; and the collective nature of the Conventions.

Reading The Colored Conventions Movement put some of the issues raised in The Textual Effects into context. For example, throughout her book, Dinius raises questions concerning authorship. What did it mean or imply when Walker’s words were employed by others without attribution? She cites Michel Foucault for the proposition that “texts, books, and discourses really began to have authors’ in the early modern period, ‘to the extent that authors became subject to punishment, that is, to the extent that discourses can be transgressive’ . . .” (TE, 194).
In many ways, however, authorship is a “so what?” issue. She notes that Apes and Walker used variants of the same phrase, “by the inches,” referring to the relentless cruelty of the slavery system. But she also notes that Walker “may have drawn it from Shakespeare’s Coriolanus . . . ” (TE, 122). Apes, in his pamphlet, restored “Shakespeare’s original wording . . . ” (TE, 122). The historian Lawrence W. Levine noted the immense popularity of Shakespeare, cutting across class, racial, ethnic and economic lines. Lacking further evidence, it remains open how or to whom Apes was alluding by using that phrase. Shakespeare’s phrases have seeped into anglophone popular culture and discourse.

The Colored Conventions Movement: Black Organizing in the Nineteenth Century, a production of the University of Delaware’s Colored Conventions Project, presents readers with a collective case study in the possibilities of digital scholarship. However, the Project is much more than a book of papers. It is also a website (ColoredConventions.org) with exhibits and links to deal with all aspects of the Conventions, from gathering Minutes from disparate locations, to collecting the names of participants and their families, their backgrounds, addresses, the kinds of homes they inhabited, the foods they ate, and how delegates reached their destinations. It is a prime example of digging “narrow but deep.” The mainly crowdsourced Project is a conscious expansion of knowledge, the product of many individuals who gathered and collated all manner of data, from many spaces and places. The papers in this volume deal with topics as disparate as the Prince Hall Masons (and other fraternal or secret societies), the various Black churches (Baptist, A.M.E., A.M.E. Zion), and a deeper consideration of transportation networks (horseback, steamboat, railroad).

By reading The Colored Conventions Movement we learn about collective authorship practices in publishing material put out under the auspices of the Conventions. Struggles over issuing a new edition of Walker’s Appeal under the imprimatur of the Convention led to Henry Highland Garnet’s decision to print, in 1848, his own “Address to the Slaves,” which appended his (Garnet’s) own writing to a reprint of Walker’s Appeal. This Garnet did after opposition by, among others, Frederick Douglass, to reissue the Appeal as a Convention document.

The Textual Effects is not an easy read; its intended audience consists of academics with specialities in Black history, literary studies and interpretation. In stark contrast, The Colored Conventions Movement is meant for all interested readers, who do not have to be specialists to follow the arguments. The authors did not “dumb down” their analysis or conclusions, but have rather made their papers truly accessible. Dinius has done a service in making readers aware of authors who followed in the wake of David Walker.

Unfortunately, much of what Dinius writes falls into the realm of pure speculation. There are repeated uses of phrases such as “it may be possible” “and “is probable”: which can also mean “may not,” in the absence of other evidence. In writing about Paola Brown’s Address on the Subject of Slavery (1851), Dinius refers to people such as Brown, no longer living in or under slavery as “self-liberated and relocated enslaved and free Black people” (p. 200)—a long literary freight train to carry the concepts of “escaped” and “runaway.” Dinius and many of the authors in The Colored Conventions Movement use the current term “enslaved persons” instead of “slaves,” maintaining that the former phrase gives humanity to the latter. This, I fear, misses the point of slavery: supporters of the system of slavery and White supremacy saw Black people as property, not persons—property without the rights, privileges or any of the attributes of humans. This was the clear implication of Thomas Jefferson’s Notes. In the third edition of David Walker’s Appeal, Walker used the term “slave” or slaves” no less than fifty times; only once, in Article IV, does he employ “free or slave persons of color.” (Hinks, 56). David Walker did not need to resort to linguistic legerdemain to emphasize the inhumanity of the system.

In her Conclusion, Dinius considers a copy of the Appeal owned, read, and notated by W. E. B. DuBois. Dinius works to draw conclusions from DuBois’s corrections to his copy of the text, the first edition of the Appeal. These she interprets as Du Bois’ correction of a typesetter’s mistake—exactly what might be expected of someone who served as editor of Crisis magazine. There are those who are compulsive picture-straighteners (I plead guilty) without regard to the artist, the picture, the style, or even whether the picture appeals to them. If this is the sum total of Du Bois’s involvement with the Appeal, so what? It was not until I read The Colored Conventions Movement that I learned about Othello Burghardt of Great Barrington, Massachusetts attending the 1847 Colored Convention in Troy, New York. (CCM, 27), long before the birth of Du Bois, his famous grandson.

The Colored Conventions Movement deserves wide circulation and emulation. May this volume be the first of many to come out of this exciting Project!
